

URM

ANNUAL MAGAZINE
AD DATES EFFECTIVE
JUNE 1 – 30, 2018
VOLUME 11

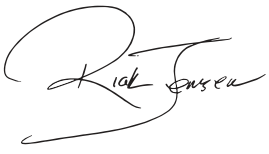

It is with great pleasure that we present our annual Bite Magazine! As with every year, we have packed the publication full of great savings opportunities. More importantly, I hope you fully explore the magazine for new ideas, and absorb the helpful tips and food safety information. Our industry continues to challenge us on what we have considered norms. We continue to face market changes driven by culinary trends, changing age demographics of the consumer base, and government influence on wages, benefits and regulatory compliance. These realities can be overwhelming as business owners and managers try to navigate and understand those influences to positively impact sales and profitability.

URM continues to be a resource to help grow your business. Again, Bite should help you energize your menu offerings with new items and concepts. In recent years, the numbers have been consistent; those that offer regular variety in their menu achieve higher growth in customer count and ticket size. Restaurants considered "cutting edge" or "culinary explorers" are growing in number and are attracting consumers away from "mainstream operators." Moreover, those that have made appropriate changes in labor and operational formats to welcome a limited service operation have actually seen larger gains in check sizes than that of traditional full service restaurants, by $5 per check over the last nine years. Bottom line is that more people are wanting variety and authentic, quality food served quickly.

Aside from updating your menu regularly, and concentrating on quality (versus inexpensive options), one cannot have a successful food business if food safety is ignored and cleanliness isn't a priority. There are several articles in Bite that focus on those issues. For the safety of your customers and for the viability of your business, please take the time to read and adjust your business as necessary. URM has made a considerable investment in food safety and regulatory compliance, and understands our duty to public health and the negative impact it can have on our business if ignored.

Thank you for your partnership and I wish you all an amazing and profitable summer!

The Value Of A Good Sales Consultant

THE DEFINITION OF VALUE

NOUN: The importance, worth, or usefulness of something. A person's principles or standards of behavior.

VERB: Estimate the monetary worth of something or to consider someone or something to be important or beneficial.

BY PAUL STEELE, URM DIRECTOR OF FOODSERVICE

Dear Industry Professionals and Restauranteurs,
If you are reading this article in BITE form there is a good chance it was hand delivered to you by an individual of Great Value, your URM sales consultant! With the exception of my first five years of delivery experience, I have been involved in some form of broadline foodservice sales or management for 35 years.

I believe the world of the Distributor Sales Representative is as challenging a career that can be found (second only to owning a business of course). I recall swapping out what was a straight forward day of physical exertion for a whole new world of "mental" exertion: cut-off deadlines, shorted product, special orders, "where's my truck!," product quality issues, follow up on notes, pressure from the competition, weather problems, knocking on new doors, running will calls, staying up on industry trends, "my dish machine is leaking!," collecting that check, dragging that sample, manufacture issues, brokerage drama, product recalls, customer concerns, learning new technology, pricing pressures, time management skills and self-inflicted...CHALLENGES! And that was my first day! All kidding aside, this is many times, "a day in the life" of your URM sales consultant. I proudly say that half of our sales force has made this look easy for more than 10 years. A much higher sales tenure than industry standard.

The word "Broadline" by definition means there are tens of thousands of industry line items, products and pricing trends where the task of your consultant is to know just enough about all of them that if they don't know the answer to your question outright, they know who to ask or how to find the answer...quickly.

If your URM consultant can gain your confidence and prove to be your "Go-To" person for where you go for answers, then they are doing their job well. You are getting a quick resolution to your needs and URM Foodservice is benefiting by placing those products on our trucks. Our success as a company depends on the value our people bring to you on a daily basis, and your success is enhanced by the job they do for YOU, our customers.

Safe Produce Handling

BY JARED KEEFER, DIRECTOR OF SAFETY & REGULATORY COMPLIANCE URM STORES, INC.

Spring and summer offer a bounty of delicious produce options for restaurateurs and guests. Because fresh produce is eaten uncooked, everyone who handles produce must be careful to prevent cross-contamination.

Provide safe produce to guests and keep these tips in mind:

RECEIVING

Be aware of current risks. Recalls are beneficial when they occur.
They get risky product out of commerce quickly to protect you and your customers. Quiz your suppliers on recalled product to ensure that you are not receiving affected product. Make sure that your supplier has a Recall Plan.

Order fresh produce frequently, and set up good receiving guidelines.
Check delivery truck and container conditions; look for damage, signs of pests and dirt or debris. When receiving fresh-cut produce, reject items that have passed their expiration dates or are not at the correct temperature.

Accept only produce in good condition.
Look for signs of spoilage, such as unusual colors, unpleasant odors, wilting or mold. Reject any produce that shows signs of insect infestation.

STORING

Don't wash produce before storing it. Avoid cross-contamination in storage.
Moisture often promotes mold growth. Store produce away from raw meat, poultry and seafood.

Store cut fruit, cut tomatoes, sprouts and cut leafy greens at 41˚F or below.
These items need temperature control to keep them safe.

PREPARING

Wash fruit and vegetables thoroughly under running water.
The water should be slightly warmer than the temperature of the produce.
-Use pre-washed and/or pre-sliced product where possible to reduce the risk of cross-contamination.

Fruit and vegetables don't come in contact with surfaces exposed to raw meat, poultry and seafood.
This includes utensils that will be used to cut or prepare produce.
-Have three designated sets of cutting boards. One for meats, one for poultry and one for produce.

Building an Effective Sustainability Plan for Your Restaurant

Deciding to make your restaurant a more sustainable operation has gotten considerably easier in the last few years. As consumer awareness grows, there are more benefits associated with "green" restaurants. Simply look at the National Restaurant Association's sustainability efforts at www.restaurant.org/Industry-Impact/Conservation.

IF YOU'VE SET A SUSTAINABILITY GOAL FOR YOURSELF, THEN IT'S TIME TO EXECUTE A PLAN.

- How will you make the operation more sustainable?
- What are the areas that can provide maximum benefits with the least amount of investment?
- How do you plan to market your efforts to your customers?

Here are some ideas to get you started towards a greener, more profitable future:
Improve energy efficiency. In most restaurants, this is the easiest place to cut costs with minimal investment. The added bonus is that you get to tell your customers how committed to sustainability you are after you've cut energy bills. Simple improvements like training your staff to manage equipment efficiently, cutting heating and cooling bills, and investing in energy-efficient water heating can make a huge difference.

Of course, every restaurant is different, and the strategies that work in your restaurant may not work somewhere else. When you're making a sustainability plan, identify where you can improve efficiency then estimate how much you'll save on future bills versus how much it will cost you to implement your plan.

Come up with a program. Another key to a successful sustainability plan for your restaurant is figuring out ways to reduce waste. Recycling and composting programs are the two most common ways to address this. Unfortunately, unlike energy efficiency improvements these waste reduction programs are either cost neutral or increase your operating expenses. That doesn't mean they don't provide benefits.

The public relations mileage you can get out of a good recycling or composting program can prove invaluable. Remind customers you recycle or compost waste. The local newspaper in your neighborhood is also another great way to get the word out about your program. Newspapers run stories like this all the time, and it can be great free advertising.

Implementing a successful sustainability plan doesn't do you a bit of good if no one knows about the hard work and money you've invested. As you put this plan into action, don't be afraid to tell everyone you can think of about what you're doing. Use multiple channels ranging from banners in the front of the house to social media to announce your new, sustainable self to the world.

Food Transparency

Restaurant owners often encounter difficulties that come with designing a menu that meets their customers' different tastes and preferences. They have to accommodate the ever-increasing list of special dietary restrictions that many Americans follow. Customers want to know where their food came from, whether it's organic, how fresh it is, and how the livestock was treated. One of the biggest trends in the foodservice industry right now is food transparency.

WHAT IS FOOD TRANSPARENCY?

Ingredient transparency is all about being open and honest with customers about what is being served. This could include basic information, such as whether or not cookies contain peanuts, or more detailed information, like the name of the farm where the beef was sourced.

WHY IS FOOD TRANSPARENCY IMPORTANT?

Unlike other trends, ingredient transparency is here to stay. As of May 2017*, chain restaurants with 20 or more locations are legally required to offer calorie and ingredient information online and in person (if requested by the customer). This new law shows that consumers won't stop caring about what's in their food. Here is a list of reasons for operators to consider being more transparent:

Allergy Concerns The top eight food allergens: milk, eggs, peanuts, tree nuts, soy, wheat, fish, and shellfish.
Dietary Concerns With the popularity of smartphones, restaurant's website to determine what menu item is the healthiest.
Trendsetting The industry emphasizes the use of ethically-sourced, organic, and non-GMO ingredients.
Open Up About Your Menu Highlight menu items with potential allergens or locally-sourced ingredients.
Post On Social Media Share information on social media and post information on the restaurant website.
Change the Business Model Provide a nutritional breakdown on menu dishes and switch to locally sourced meat and produce.

As food transparency expectancy continues to grow, diners want to know where their food comes from, what it's made from, and how it's being prepared.
